Foreign Films in the United States

THE status of the foreign film in the U. S. has altered somewhat in the past year. While the imports still are not generally accepted in regular theatres, they have been utilized with much success on occasion in some of them.

The basic reason for this was an economic one. Where business was slow, especially for the midweek shows, something was needed to bolster the sagging box office. Imports were used (including dubbed versions) and were found to increase business. This, of course, does not apply to all situations but at least foreign films were shown where they had never been considered before and in towns that seemed highly unlikely for such exhibition.

Another reason for their utilization was the alleged shortage of product which has caused considerable consternation among exhibitors. And many have found the foreign films a profitable substitute.

Each year there seems to be a shift in popularity to a different country's films. Last year Japan was the fair-haired source while this past year has seen France once again dominate the imports. In fact, "Diabolique" has been one of the most phenomenal imports shown here in years. Not exhibited in a dubbed version, it nevertheless has been a success in virtually every spot it's played. Other successful French films include "Adorable Creatures," "The Proud and the Beautiful" and "Rififi."

Other important foreign language films imported recently include: (Italian) "La Strada," "Madame Butterfly," "Umberto D." and "House of Ricordi;" (Japanese) "Samurai" (Academy Award winner), The "Golden Demon" and "The Phantom Horse;" (German) "Don Juan" and "The Last Ten Days."

Among the top British films shown here this past year were "The Divided Heart," "Doctor at Sea," "I Am a Camera," "The Ladykillers," "The Night My Number Came Up," "Private's Progress," "Richard III" and "Simon and Laura."

The number of art theatres has also increased somewhat due, in part, to the product shortage and to the quality product crossing the ocean.

A report from the New York State Motion Picture Division, covering the period from April 1, 1955, to March 31, 1956 showed a total of 547 foreign films reviewed. Hong Kong topped the list with 139 and was followed by Mexico wtih 95; England, 73; Germany, 70; Italy, 37; U.S.S.R., 30, and France, 27.

The films listed below include foreign-language—and also British—pictures with English subtitles or English dubbing, excepting some of the Greek, German and Spanish product. The country of origin of the film is indicated in parentheses after the title: (Arg) Argentina; (Aust) Australia; (Au) Austria; (Br) British; (Can) Canada; (Fin) Finland; (F) France; (G) Germany; (Gr) Greece; (In) India; (I) Ireland; (It) Italy; (J) Japan; (M) Mexico; (Russ) Russia; (So. Af.) South Africa; (S) Spain; (Sw) Sweden; (Y) Yugoslavia. (R) indicates a reissue, (C) a picture in color, (CS) CinemaScope and (VV) VistaVision.

THE AUDIENCE SPECIALIZES ITSELF!
The sheer volume of entertainment material being forced on American audiences today is frightening . . . it becomes a relief to turn it off!

BUT, FILMS OF SPECIAL APPEAL ARE MORE APPEALING THAN EVER . . . for when American audiences do go to the theatre, they don't want just another movie! . . . they search out the fresh, the strange, the exotic, the Special!

The very factors that brought American films to dominate most foreign markets are today at work enhancing the foreign film in America.

TO THE FOREIGN PRODUCER (or to the Art Producer whose product is "foreign" in standard movie houses), we offer sustained specialized effort in enlarging American audiences and revenues.

TO THE EXHIBITOR HUNTING A NEW POLICY IN A MAD MARKET
we offer exciting first-class programs tailored to the profit in each situation. Prepare to be astounded!

HISTORY OF ALLIED ARTISTS PICTURES

ALLIED ARTISTS PICTURES CORPORATION evolved as MONOGRAM PICTURES CORPORATION in 1930, under the leadership of W. Ray Johnston, its president, who formed the company with a group of independent exchange men who were distributors for its predecessor, Rayart Productions, founded by Mr. Johnston in 1924. The exchange owners who distributed Rayart product had previously formed a co-operative organization merging distribution units. This nucleus was incorporated as Monogram with Mr. Johnston as president. Trem Carr headed production, and Edward A. Golden joined the organization as sales manager.

In the first year of operation the company produced 28 features. Two years later it entered the worldwide market with Pathe as British distributor, and Empire Films, Ltd., as Canadian outlet. The United States and Canada was served through 37 affiliated exchanges. For 1932-33 the company produced 32 pictures, and in the next year increased its production budget one third. Mr. Johnston marked his 29th anniversary in the business in 1952.

During the autumn of 1935, Mr. Johnston, Trem Carr and Herbert Yates formed Republic Pictures, incorporating the Monogram exchanges as distribution outlets. A year later Mr. Johnston and Mr. Carr withdrew from Republic and revived Monogram, creating a new system of franchise distribution.

In succeeding years the company gradually heightened the quality of its productions, with Mr. Johnston again as president and Trem Carr as executive director in charge of production. Number of annual feature releases has been maintained at between 40 and 50. Among the important films have been "Dillinger," "Lady, Let's Dance," "Women in Bondage" and "The Unknown Guest"; and in 1946 the company released its first million dollar picture, "Suspense."

In November, 1945, Steve Broidy, formerly general sales manager, was elected president of Monogram, with Mr. Johnston becoming chairman of the board. Issue of 100,000 shares of 5½% convertible preferred, voted in January, 1945, has since been redeemed, and the authorized capitalization of the company is now represented by 1,500,000 shares, increased by 500,000 by stockholders' authorization on Nov. 12, 1953, of common stock, par value $1.

Allied Artists franchise holders currently include: Arthur C. Bromberg, Atlanta, Charlotte, Memphis, New Orleans; Harry Berkson, Albany, Buffalo; Herman Rifkin, Boston, New Haven; Nate Schultz, Cleveland; Howard Stubbins and Mel Hulling, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Portland. The company operates its own branches in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Oklahoma City, Dallas, St. Louis, Salt Lake City, Denver, Kansas City, Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh.

In November, 1946, Allied Artists Productions, Inc., was formed as a wholly-owned subsidiary of Monogram Pictures Corporation, to handle production of high-budget pictures exclusively. Physical distribution of the Allied Artists films is handled by the existing Allied Artists exchanges, but otherwise the new company is treated as a separate entity.

On Nov. 12, 1953, the corporate name was changed from Monogram Pictures Corporation to Allied Artists Pictures Corporation.

Stratford Pictures Corp. organized August, 1949, with Steve Broidy, president, and George D. Burrows vice-president, distributes foreign language films in this country, using Monogram exchanges.

In 1951, the company engaged in the production of films for TV and for that purpose organized the Interstate Television Corporation.

HISTORY OF COLUMBIA PICTURES

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORP. was incorporated January 10, 1924. The company's origin traces back to Harry Cohn, who was an independent producer making shorts. Jack Cohn resigned from Universal to go into the motion picture business for himself. The firm of Jack and Harry Cohn was then organized. Later Jack and Harry Cohn prevailed upon Joseph Brandt, who had been the General Manager of Universal to join them. The name of the company was changed to CBC Sales Corporation. Later it was changed to Columbia.

HISTORY OF LOEW'S INCORPORATED

Loew's, Inc. takes its name from its founder, the late Marcus Loew, a pioneer in the nickelodeon and arcade era of the movies. Among his early associates were Adolph Zukor and the brothers Joseph M. and Nicholas M. Schenck, the latter now chairman of the board. For a number of years the organization was active exclusively in film exhibition, chiefly in theatres with a mixed picture and vaudeville policy. In 1910, after several years of expansion, Marcus Loew organized Loew's Consolidated Enterprises. The next year this was succeeded by Loew's Theatrical Enterprises, extending the scope of theatre operations from New York into other cities.

By 1919, Loew's had partial or entire control of 56 theatres. Loew's, Inc., was organized in October, 1919, and acquired the stock of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises. Continuing a policy of gradual expansion of theatre interests, business had reached a point where Marcus Loew, Nicholas M. Schenck and other executives were looking about for a way of uniting their theatre interests to an active production organization. This problem was met in 1920 with the acquisition of the stock of Metro Pictures Corporation, which later turned out such films as "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Scaramouche," and "The Four Horsemen."

The move to fortify the playing schedules of the Loew Theatres with an annual production output proved sound, and further expansion was in order. In 1924, Marcus Loew and his associates made successful overtures for the interests in the Goldwyn Company, which had been started in 1917, and Loew's became the owner of the merged Metro-Goldwyn stock. Shortly afterwards producing assets of Louis B. Mayer Pictures, including the services of Mayer, Irving Thalberg and J. Robert Rubin were acquired by the company and the production organization controlled by Loew's took the name Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Important executive posts in the new production organization were held by Louis B. Mayer, the late Irving Thalberg and J. Robert Rubin, who became vice-president in charge of the Eastern offices. Howard Dietz, now vice-president of Loew's in charge of publicity, and advertising, originated the Leo the Lion trademark, which the company has largely exploited.

In December, 1937, to simplify the corporate structure, legal control of the entire production and distribution organization was vested in Loew's, Inc., with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer being used merely as a trade name.

In the spring of 1949, the silver anniversary of M-G-M productions was celebrated. Among notable pictures in company history have been "The Big Parade," "Ben Hur," "Grand Hotel," "Dinner at Eight," "The Thin Man," "David Copperfield," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Captains Courageous," "Goodbye Mr. Chips," "Mrs. Miniver," "Gone With the Wind," produced by David O. Selznick, released by M-G-M., "Madame Curie," "The Yearling," "Battleground," King Solomon's Mines," "Quo Vadis" "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," and many others.

Among the Loew executives who have been with the company or with its theatre subsidiaries twenty-six years or more are Leopold Friedman, vice-president and secretary of Loew's Theatres and head of its legal department, with a record of thirty-seven years service; C. C. Moskowitz, vice-president and treasurer of Loew's, with the firm thirty-nine years, and Joseph R. Vogel, president of Loew's Theatres, has been with the organization thirty-eight years.

Loew's, Inc., for some years produced from forty to fifty feature pictures annually and turned out an average of fifty short subjects each season, in addition to the distribution of the newsreel, "News of the Day."

Mr. Mayer resigned his post on August 31, 1951 and was succeeded by Dore Schary as vice-president in charge of production and studio operations. Subsequently, Mr. Mayer reached a financial settlement with the company in lieu of his profit-sharing arrangement and continuing equities in released and unreleased pictures and thus completely severed his many years of association with the company.

On February 6, 1952, the consent decree against Loew's, Inc. was signed in New York. It provided for a divorce between the producing and distributing phases of the corporation and its domestic exhibition activities and interests.

Outright divestiture of 24 theatres in two years and possible contingent divestiture of almost another 50 theatres were provided for. The decree also contained a new divorcement approach, made necessary by Loew's outstanding indebtedness, which Justice Department officials put at about $40,000,000. Under this provision, the theatre subsidiaries within two years began to be operated independently of Loew's from then on, but Loew's could continue to hold their stock if it could prove to the court's satisfaction that it could not refinance so as to divide the present debt between itself and the new theatre company.

In that case, the theatre stock could be retained by Loew's until suitable refinancing was arranged. The divorcement would have to be complete in any event within five years from the date of the decree. From the time the new theatre company was set up until its capital stock was distributed to Loew's stockholders, halt of its board would be controlled by the New York statutory court to insure independent operation.

Trade practice and other provisions of the Loew's decree generally followed those of the earlier decrees. The reorganization plan must transfer all Loew's theatre assets to a new company, and in return Loew's will get all of the capital stock of the new theatre company.

The decree provided that so long as Loew's retains the stock of the new theatre company it can receive money from the theatre company either to pay off the funded debt or to pay dividends to Loew's stockholders. The by-laws of the theatre company must state that until its capital stock is distributed to Loew's stockholders, in order to make sure it is operated independently of Loew's, one-half of its board of directors shall be approved by the New York court "and be subject to its direction."

From the consummation of the reorganization plan on, the decree states, Loew's and the new theatre company must be operated completely independently and have no common directors, officers, agents or employes. Within six months from the time the theatre company stock is distributed to Loew's stockholders, all officers, directors and agents of Loew's or any employe who owns one-half of one per cent or more of the Loew's common stock must, if they are to continue with Loew's, either sell or deposit with a court-appointed trustee all stock in the new theatre company.

The trustee shall vote the stock, and sell it if it is not disposed of by its owner within one year from the time it is deposited with the trustee. The owner of the stock can get the dividends, however, while it is trusteed. The same arrangement is prescribed for officers, directors or agents or large stockholders of the new theatre company, with respect to stock in Loew's.

If Loew's asks more time to carry out better refinancing, and if the court grants it, "then, after two years from the date of transfer of the assets to the new theatre company, no officer or director of the theatre company or of Loew's shall receive, directly or indirectly, any dividends on any share of Loew's stock in excess of the amount of earnings per share of the company in which any such person is an officer or director."

The decree provided that no officer or director or agent or employe of Loew's shall have any interest in the profits of the new theatre company or in the business of film exhibition, and lays down a similar ban against interest in production or distribution for the like theatre company officials and employes.

The theatre company by-laws must provide that no one affiliated with any other circuit can become an officer or director unless approved by the Justice Department and the court, and that in no event can an officer or director be affiliated with any other circuit which was a defendant in a government anti-trust suit. Loew's by-laws must provide that no one who is a director, agent, officer, employe or substantial stockholder of another distributor can be an officer or director.

Loew's is banned from exhibition and the theatre company is banned from distribution, except on application to and approval of the court and on a showing that such action will not unreasonably restrain competition. Until divorcement or divestiture is completed, Loew's could acquire new theatres to replace those destroyed or converted to non-theatrical purposes or to replace theatres on which leases cannot be renewed. In the latter case, the court must approve. All other acquisition is banned. After the divorcement and divestiture provisions are carried out, theatres could be obtained only to replace those destroyed or converted, and only with court approval.

HISTORY OF PARAMOUNT

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP., currently in production, as well as in distribution, may be said to have taken most of its origins from the activities of Adolph Zukor, who entered the amusement field in the dawn years with a penny arcade, with Hale's Tours, a motion picture exhibition device, and with nickelodeon theatres, including an early association with the late Marcus Loew in those undertakings. Mr. Zukor in 1912 formed the Engadine Corporation, to distribute an imported picture, which evolved into his Famous Players Film Company, which was to make famous plays with famous players in them. W. W. Hodkinson, emerging from General Film Company, the "trust" of the day, in 1914 formed Paramount Pictures Corporation, which took over distribution of the Zukor product and along with it the product of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and others. This led to a course of mergers, with Mr. Zukor dominant.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was incorporated on July 19, 1916. In 1917 twelve producing companies merged with it. At the same time the corporation integrated production and distribution by acquiring a national distribution system through a merger with Artcraft Pictures Corporation and Paramount Pictures Corporation.

In 1919 the corporation started its theatre acquisition program. It acquired stock interest in Southern Enterprises, Inc., with 135 theatres in the South; in 1920 it acquired stock interest in New England Theatres, Inc., with 50 New England theatres; in the Butterfield Theatre Circuit with 70 theatres in Michigan about 1926; in Balaban & Katz with 50 theatres in Illinois at the same time. Later numerous theatres in the West and Middle West were acquired.

Paramount's first great star was Mary Pickford, around whom Mr. Zukor built his Famous Players. The roster of the organization has included a preponderance of the great names of the screen. "The Covered Wagon," and "The Ten Commandments" are landmarks of Paramount tradition.

In April, 1927, the corporate name was changed to Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, and in April, 1930, to Paramount Publix Corporation. In 1933, Paramount Publix Corporation was adjudicated a bankrupt in the Federal District Court for the Southern District of New York. In June, 1935, it was reorganized under Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act under the name of Paramount Pictures, Inc.

Barney Balaban, president, arrived through the field of exhibition, starting on Chicago's West Side with a nickelodeon which developed into the Balaban & Katz circuit, dominant in the Chicago area.

Y. Frank Freeman, also a former exhibition executive, is the vice-president in charge of studio production. The Hollywood studios annually turn out a program of quality feature pictures. The company also produces and releases a program of one-reel and two-reel short subjects and 104 issues of Paramount News annually.

In December, 1949, as a result of the reorganization required by the Consent Decree in the action of the Government against the major companies, Paramount split into two companies—Paramount Pictures Corporation, for production-distribution, and United Paramount Theatres, Inc., for theatre operation. (See Theatre Circuits).

Paramount was the first motion picture company to recognize the potential importance of television, particularly from a theatre standpoint. In 1939 it formed a subsidiary, Paramount Television Productions, Inc., which operates Station KTLA in Hollywood. Paramount is interested in Allen B. DuMont Laboratories, Inc., and DuMont Broadcasting Corporation, which owns and operates WABD in New York City.

Net profit for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1955, was $9,707,000, equivalent to $4.49 per share on the 2,161,716 outstanding.

HISTORY OF RKO PICTURES CORPORATION AND RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC.

RKO PICTURES CORPORATION was the parent of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., the producing and distributing company organized on November 18, 1950 as a result of the separation of production and distribution from exhibition under the consent decree which terminated the Government's long-standing anti-trust litigation against Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. The latter company is now dissolved, its exhibition arm now taking form in a new company, RKO-Keith Orpheum Theatres, Inc. (corporate personnel in this section; theatre holdings in Theatre Circuits Section.)

RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., purchased entire from its parent by Howard R. Hughes in March, 1954, was sold by him in July, 1955, to Thomas F. O'Neil, and is now wholly owned by Mr. O'Neil's General Teleradio Corp., a subsidiary of General Tire and Rubber Co.

At midsummer, 1955, RKO Pictures Corp. was thus a company without a business, its only assets being approximately $20,000,000 in the bank to pay for still unredeemed stock and a substantial carry-forward tax loss.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., with its variously affiliated and subsidiary interests, had the most complex ancestry in the industry. Its beginnings are as remote as a transaction by which John R. Freuler of Milwaukee, invested $900 with an ex-policeman in a nickelodeon in 1905, and include, too, heritages of the important vaudeville institutions of Benjamin F. Keith in Boston and the Martin Beck Orpheums. The Milwaukee nickelodeon led to the formation of the Western Film Exchange of Milwaukee, and its expansion to other cities, becoming the nucleus of the Mutual Film Corporation of Virginia and some nineteen subsidiaries in distribution and production, 1913-1918. Its first president was Harry E. Aitken, promoter of "The Birth of a Nation," and in sequel of Triangle Pictures Corporation, the organization launched on a policy of $2 a seat movies in 1915.

The highlight of Mutual was its starting of the big star salary wave through employment in 1916 of Charles Chaplin at a $670,000 salary for his work in twelve two-reel comedies to be made in a year. Through various transmutations, Mutual became Exhibitors Mutual Film Corporation, the Robertson-Cole concern and the Film Booking Offices of America, presently FBO, for a time under the ministrations of Patrick A. Powers, who had entered the film field with Universal Film Manufacturing Company, a contributing producer.

In 1927, Joseph P. Kennedy of Boston, and Guy C. Currier, Boston lawyer and capitalist, entered FBO. On January 28, 1928, the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation was organized, bringing in various exhibition interests.

In October, 1928, with the Radio Corporation of America looking to its place in the development of the sound picture, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation was formed taking over control of the K-A-O concern and Orpheum Circuit, Inc., and later various other exhibition interests, including R-K-O Proctor Corporation and R-K-O Midwest Corporation. FBO Productions, Inc., and studio subsidiary, the principal producing interests acquired in the alignments, was renamed R-K-O Radio Pictures. In January, 1931, it took over various elements of Pathe Exchange, Inc., including Pathe News, and production assets, including studios in California. Through Pathe with its prior operations of absorption, this added to the background of components such items as the relics of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Producers Distributing Corporation, thus adding to the antecedents the efforts of W. W. Hodkinson, founder of the Paramount distribution machine, after prior experience with the long defunct General Film Company, sales arm of the Motion Picture Patents Company.

On January 27, 1933, the R-K-O Corporation went into an equity receivership and subsequently reorganization proceedings, with the Irving Trust Company appointed receiver and trustee. The receivership and reorganization did not include the principal subsidiaries such as R-K-O Radio Pictures, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and RKO-Pathe, Inc. (formerly Pathe News, Inc.).

A plan of reorganization was approved January 17, 1939, confirmed April 11, 1939, and affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on September 8, 1939. The plan was consummated on January 27, 1940, when all the assets of the predecessor RKO company were transferred to the successor RKO company and the securities of the predecessor became exchangeable for securities of the successor in accordance with the terms of the plan.

In August, 1947, RKO sold Pathe News to Warner Brothers, but retained RKO Pathe, Inc., as a commercial and television film production company.

The predecessor company, until May, 1948, was controlled through stock ownership by Atlas Corporation (RCA having disposed of its interest in April of 1943), and the management was then headed by Floyd B. Odlum, as chairman of the board, N. Peter Rathvon, as president and in charge of production at the studio, and Ned E. Depinet, as executive vice-president and the chief executive in New York.

In May, 1948, Howard Hughes bought the controlling interest, 929,000 shares of common stock, owned by Atlas Corporation, although that company retained a number of option certificates.

At a special meeting held March 28, 1949, the stockholders of RKO adopted a Plan of Reorganization which resulted in a separation of theatre exhibition from production and distribution through the formation of two new companies to which these separate assets were transferred. Stockholders of RKO received stocks of the two new companies in exchange for their RKO stock. The Plan of Reorganization was provided for in a consent decree entered into after extensive negotiations with the Department of Justice, which terminated the long Government anti-trust litigation against RKO. After the separation was completed RKO was dissolved.

After court hearings early in 1952 involving Mr. Hughes' right to delay the sale of his theatre stock as long as it was trusteed, the question was resolved when he sold it early in 1953 in a single block to Alfred A. List, financier. Previous to that Mr. Hughes sold an option on his stock in the production distribution company to a syndicate headed by Ralph Stolkin of Chicago. After a brief period of operation with a new board and officers the Stolkin group withdrew, following unfavorable publicity, leaving Mr. Hughes again in majority control of the picture company.

In March of 1954, while a series of stockholder suits were pending against Mr. Hughes and the management of the picture company, Mr. Hughes offered to buy all the assets of the parent RKO Pictures Corp. for a sum sufficient to pay each shareholder $6 for each share of stock. This offer was approved by the board of directors and by the courts and Mr. Hughes turned over approximately $23,000,000 in cash to the company. Before the final date set for the stock redemption, June 30, 1954, it was discovered that Floyd Odlum's Atlas Corporation had been buying the stock in the open market for prices up to 6¼. Only a small proportion of the stock was redeemed at the offered price—$6—and the company remained in existence.

HISTORY OF RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC.

This company, the production and distribution arm of RKO Teleradio Pictures (see above) was purchased entirely from that corporation by Howard R. Hughes for $23,000,000. In July, 1955, he sold it to General Teleradio, a wholly-owned subsidiary of General Tire and Rubber Co., owner of the Mutual Broadcasting Corp., the Don Lee Network, the Yankee network and five television stations.

HISTORY OF REPUBLIC PICTURES

REPUBLIC PICTURES CORPORATION is the outgrowth of a development which started when its founder, H. J. Yates, one time member of the executive staff of the American Tobacco Company, entered the motion picture industry in 1915 with Hedwig Laboratories and launched Republic Laboratories in New York in 1918. That in turn was introductory to a procedure by which he took over the Eastman Kodak Company's motion picture laboratories, and acquired the Rothacker Laboratories in Chicago in 1924, crystalizing into the concern now known as Consolidated Film Industries.

Laboratory connections brought Mr. Yates into association with production and picture financing. In May, 1935, under his auspices four independent producing companies merged to form Republic Productions, Inc., producing unit, and subsequently, Republic Pictures Corporation, to distribute through franchise agreements. In the rented Mack Sennett studios in North Hollywood, the company first went to work.

In 1938, Republic bought the Mack Sennett studios and land adjoining, and embarked upon a construction program resulting in the erection of several large sound stages. Since the war, the company has effected additional studio expansion, and has also increased the facilities of Consolidated Film Industries laboratories, both East and West Coast.

Republic owns and operates its own branches in exchange centers throughout the United States, as well as in 17 foreign territories, the balance being operated under franchise agreement.

Distribution is under the guidance of C. Bruce Newbery.

In September, 1941, Republic Productions, Inc., was admitted to membership in the Association of Motion Picture Producers. Republic Pictures Corporation joined the Motion Picture Association in April of 1948.

Production policy, which originally was geared to the western and 'B' market, was altered to include top-budget features during the past few years; and the most recent announcement indicates that the company will concentrate on 'A' product, while continuing a small number of westerns and lower-budget films.

In November of 1945, stockholders of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., voted the merger and consolidation of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., and Republic Pictures Corporation with Setay Company, Inc., the corporate name of which was changed to Republic Pictures Corporation. As of Oct. 30, 1954, the company's assets were $24,908,125.

For its fiscal year ended October 24, 1955, Republic and subsidiary companies earned a consolidated net income of $919,034, compared with $804,201 in the preceding fiscal year. Gross revenue was $39,621,099, compared with $37,962,359 in the previous fiscal year.

As Fox Film Corp., February 1, 1915; New York, Succeeded by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., July 22, 1952, Delaware.
HISTORY OF TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX

TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION is the end result of a business begun back in the nickelodeon days of show business by William Fox. In little more than 35 years, the company has grown to a $150,000,000 corporation, operating a 325-acre studio in Hollywood, producing annually from 20 to 26 features, over 50 short and 104 newsreels.

At the turn of the century, Mr. Fox, then in textiles, entered the arcade and nickelodeon business and became a member of the exhibition firm of Fox, Moss and Brill. His associates were B. S. Moss and Sol Brill. This association led to the establishment by Mr. Fox of a film exchange, the Greater New York Film Rental Company. In 1913 he organized the Box Office Attraction Company, later acquiring the services of Winfield Sheehan, associated with Mr. Fox for many years.

February 1, 1915, the Fox Film Corporation was founded with the intention of combining production, exhibition and distribution under one name. Film exchanges were established in a dozen cities throughout the country. Today the company has 32 domestic branches and offices throughout the world.

In 1917, with the shift of production from the seat to the west coast, Fox Films moved into its Sunset Studio in Hollywood.

When sound same to the industry, in 1926, Fox Film was able to use the pioneering efforts of Theodore Case and Earl I. Sponable, who invented Movietone, a sound-on-film process.

About 1929 there started a series of reorganizations and financial deals and involvements, principal of which was the purchase by Fox Films of control of Loew's, Inc., for approximately $44,000,000. By order of the Government, the Fox Company's ownership of Loew's was later dissolved and various banking interests acquired control of that stock.

During these reorganizations, William Fox's connections with the company were discontinued. Sidney R. Kent joined the company as executive vice-president on April 1, 1932, and two weeks later became the company's president. Mr. Kent continued as president until his death, early in 1942.

In 1935, the Fox Film Corporation was merged with a major producing organization, Twentieth Century Pictures, headed by Joseph M. Schenck, and the company assumed its present corporate name. This merger brought Darryl F. Zanuck into the company as vice-president in charge of production of the merged organizations. Mr. Schenck became chairman of the board and continued in that position until his resignation in June, 1942, when Wendell L. Willkie took over the post.

Following Mr. Kent's death, Spyros P. Skouras, a leading theatre operator, became president.

The company does not operate or directly own any theatres in the U. S. The company has a controlling interest in the Hoyt's group of about 168 theatres in Australia. Twentieth Century-Fox has a substantial interest in Gaumont-British Pictures Corporation, Ltd., owner and operator of some 264 theatres in the British Isles, and also an interest in Amalgamated Theatres, Ltd., comprising 44 theatres in New Zealand. It also has interests in theatres in Egypt, Holland, Colombia, South Africa and Chile.

By decree entered June 7, 1951, 20th Century-Fox separated into a new producing-distributing and a new theatre company on Sept. 27, 1952. The decree provided that National Theatres, formerly a wholly-owned subsidiary, divest itself of 91 theatres and four parcels of real estate not later than June 7, 1953. Additional divestiture is required in the event that, in certain competitive situations, independent competitors do not continue to operate theatres on the runs referred to in the decree or in the event that National, in operating its theatres in certain situations, adopts certain specified operating policies. There are 57 situations with respect to which one or both of these conditions is applicable wherein additional divestiture could be required in the event the conditions stipulated hold true. Where a competing independent exhibitor is not afforded a reasonable opportunity to procure films on particular run, National may be limited in the number of grade of films it can buy for its houses in each of the competitive situations listed in the decree. There are 108 of them. Charles P. Skouras, president of National, anticipates the company will retain approximately 420 theatres when divorcement is completed.

In December 1952 the company acquired rights to an anamorphic lens developed by French theoretical optician Professor Henri Chretien and on February 2, 1953, the company announced adoption of the CinemaScope process. Shortly thereafter demonstrations of the process, projecting pictures in a 2:55 to 1 aspect ratio, were held in principal cities of the U. S. and abroad. The process comprises, in addition to the anamorphic lens, a 4-track stereophonic sound system, and a screen two and one half times as wide as standard screens. "The Robe," first CinemaScope picture, had its world premiere September 16, 1953, at the Roxy Theatre, New York. In its first seven days, the film grossed $264,428, net after amusements taxes to set a new world box-office record for a single week of business.

World-wide film rentals are given in the following tabulation.

Year	U.S. & Can. (000 Omitted)	Rest of World	Total
1941.....	$30,848	$15,646	$46,494
1942.....	41,169	19,803	60,972

1951.....	.....	.....	97,292
1952.....	.....	.....	93,160
1953.....	.....	.....	105,662

In accordance with the Consent Decree in the Government trust case, the divorcement of the National Theatres from Twentieth Century-Fox became effective Sept. 27, 1952. National Theatres also acquired the Roxy Theatre in New York. (See National Theatres Corp. in Corporation section and Theatre Circuits.)

HISTORY OF UNITED ARTISTS

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION was organized in April of 1919, in sequel to a meeting of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and D. W. Griffith at the home of William G. McAdoo in Santa Barbara. It had grown out of a suggestion to those stars made by Oscar Price, publicity and promotional assistant to Mr. McAdoo when he was Secretary of the Treasury and the stars were helping sell Liberty Loans.

Mr. Price was the first president, soon to resign and withdraw with Mr. McAdoo. Hiram Abrams took over. Later Joseph M. Schenck became the head of the concern, to be succeeded in turn by Al Lichtman, who was followed by the administration of Dr. Atillio H. Giannini and George Schaefer, who was succeeded by Maurice Silverstone, who resigned at mid-year of 1941. Of the founders, the remaining stockholders are Miss Pickford, Charles Chaplin and the Douglas Fairbanks estate. Sir Alexander Korda became a stockholder in 1935; Samuel Goldwyn, retiring from the organization in March of 1941, sold his stock to the company; then in April, 1944, Korda also sold his stock to the corporation, and terminated his American distribution arrangement with it.

In July, 1950, Miss Pickford and Mr. Chaplin each sold 3,600 shares of the 4,000 shares owned by each of them to a syndicate represented by Paul V. McNutt who became chairman of the board.

In February, 1951, a new syndicate acquired management of the company. The group is composed of Arthur B. Krim, former president of Eagle-Lion Classics, Inc.; Robert Benjamin, president of the J. Arthur Rank Organization (America), Inc.; Matthew Fox, former vice-president of Universal-International; William J. Heineman, U.A. vice-president in charge of distribution; Max E. Youngstein, vice-president in charge of world-wide advertising, publicity and exploitation; and Arnold Picker, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution. By showing a profit for 1951—the company's first year "in the black" since 1948—the syndicate, in January, 1952, was enabled to take 10-year management control of United Artists with ownership of 50 percent of the stock and voting control of the remaining 50 percent owned by Miss Pickford and Mr. Chaplin.

In February, 1955, the Arthur Krim management group acquired Mr. Chaplin's 25 per cent interest in the corporation, leaving as the sole shareholders Miss Pickford, with one third of the remaining stock, and the Krim interests, which own the balance.

On February 23, 1956, the Krim group acquired 100 per cent ownership of the company by purchasing Miss Pickford's holdings.

HISTORY OF UNIVERSAL

Universal Pictures has a history stemming from the pioneer days of the industry. The company was formed under the title, "Universal" in 1912, when Carl Laemmle amalgamated Bison 101, Nestor, Powers and several other organizations, including his own Imp firm. Carl Laemmle had entered the picture business as an exhibitor, opening the White Front Theatre on Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago February 24, 1906.

He founded Laemmle Film Service on October 1 of that year, quit the Patents Company in April 1909, and released his first Independent Motion Picture (Imp) Company "feature", "Hiawatha", length, 988 feet, on October 25, 1909.

In that experimental epoch, Universal launched the star system by hiring Florence Lawrence for $1,000 a week and billing her as "Queen of the Screen." The studio also produced the screen's initial "exposé" film, "Traffic in Souls", first film to be reviewed by the drama critics of the daily press.

Universal acquired a studio at Sunset Boulevard and Gower Street in 1914, and began making pictures in Hollywood. In 1915, production was moved to the present site, Universal City. Here appeared Wallace Reid, Lon Chaney, Mary Pickford, Rudolph Valentino and Boris Karloff, among many others.

"Foolish Wives", "first million-dollar feature", "The Hunchback of Notre Dame", "All Quiet On the Western Front", and screen dramas of like import, were filmed in the decades which followed.

On March 16, 1920, Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane assumed complete control of the company.

On April 2, 1936, Universal passed under new management, with J. Cheever Cowdin as chairman of the board. On January 6, 1938, Nate J. Blumberg became president of the company.

Under the new management Universal embarked upon the policy of developing star values and has been most successful during the time it has operated in the establishment of such names as Deanna Durbin, Abbott & Costello, Maria Montez, Donald O'Connor and others under contract.

During 1946, the company underwent its second transformation. Production-wise, it eliminated the production of all so-called "B" pictures, Westerns and serials, following a merger and acquisition of the assets of International Pictures Corp. of Leo Spitz and William Goetz. Mr. Spitz and Mr. Goetz became the production heads, and Universal-International trademark emerged.

Secondly, Universal completed a distribution deal with the J. Arthur Rank organization for the American distribution of the top British pictures produced by the Rank affiliated companies.

The year 1946 also saw the emergence of United World Pictures, a wholly-owned Universal subsidiary, to handle the production and distribution of non-theatrical films. United World acquired the Bell and Howell Filmsound Library of 6,000 subjects. It then purchased Castle Films, the largest seller of non-theatrical packaged films to the home. The year 1950 saw the resignation of J. Cheever Cowdin with Mr. Blumberg assuming full command. Alfred E. Daff, who had been foreign sales manager, assumed the top post in the foreign distribution setup and then became director of world sales with the resignation of W. A. Scully—a post without parallel in the industry. Mr. Scully will continue until 1954 as domestic sales consultant. Charles J. Feldman was appointed domestic sales manager under Mr. Daff and Americo Aboaf foreign sales head.

In November, 1951 Decca Records acquired approximately 28 per cent of Universal's common stock to make it the largest single stockholder in the company. For this interest Decca paid $3,773,914 for the 234,900 shares involved and the right to purchase 32,500 additional warrants, according to a report made by Milton R. Rackmil, president of Decca, to the Securities and Exchange Commission

He reported that of these shares, 78,000 were purchased on the New York Stock Exchange, while the balance, most of which formerly was owned by the Paul G. Brown estate, was bought from Gertrude Bergman, Maurice A. Bergman, Lewis Fox Blumberg, N. J. Blumberg, Vera F. Blumberg, Alfred E. Daff, Edith Mayer Goetz, William Goetz, Doris Jean Mayer and Leo Spitz.

The warrants were purchased from N. J. Blumberg and Doris Jean Mayer, at a reported price of $5 each. The purchases on the New York Stock Exchange were made at current market prices; the purchases from the individuals named were made at prices reached as a result of negotiations. Purchase of the holdings of Spitz and Goetz changed their status to that of employes under contract. Both continued in their posts, Spitz as executive head of production and Goetz as executive in charge of production. Their block of about 150,000 shares was acquired at approximately $15 a share. Blumberg's holdings included 15,000 shares and 32,500 warrants. In announcing the purchase, Rackmil declared, "The ownership of these shares will bring about a close association between our two companies. We have kindred interests in the entertainment business. These interests can be developed for our mutual benefit. The transaction indicates the confidence that our respective companies have in the future of the motion picture and allied industries."

In the spring of 1952, Decca Records became the controlling stockholders of Universal. Its interests were acquired partly in the open market and partly through the purchase of all J. Arthur Rank's stock in the company. As a result, Milton R. Rackmil, president of Decca Records, was made a member of the Universal board and subsequently elected president of Universal in July, 1952. N. J. Blumberg, at the same time, was elected chairman of the board.

HISTORY OF WARNER BROTHERS

WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., took its origin in the 90-seat Cascade theatre in Newcastle, Pa., early in 1905, an enterprise of Harry M. Warner, who brought his three brothers, Sam, Albert and Jack, presently into motion picture enterprises, including regional distribution and eventually, in 1913, into production with Warners Features. Warner Brothers, the concern of the modern era, was incorporated in 1923, to produce and distribute. The concern acquired its first theatre, at Youngstown, Ohio, in December, 1924. Warners' first important impress on production was with "My Four Years in Germany," based on Ambassador James W. Gerard's book. Their pioneering of sound, in collaboration—and ultimate litigation—with the Telephone Company, is familiar history.

In 1925, Warner acquired Vitagraph, Inc., which operated 34 exchanges in the U. S. and Canada, and also acquired two other concerns with foreign exchanges. It also acquired the name and assorted assets of First National Pictures.

A plan of reorganization which split the Warner company into a new theatre company and a new production-distribution company in compliance with its consent decree, was approved by stockholders. The re-organization, reached through a consent decree with the Department of Justice, provided for Warner stockholders to receive one-half share in Stanley Warner Corporation and the new picture company in exchange for each share now held. The reorganization was consummated February 28, 1953.

In compliance with the reorganization plan, Harry M., Albert and Jack L. Warner sold their Warner Theatre stock interest to Fabian Enterprises, Inc. which now controls the theatre company. The circuit was renamed the Stanley Warner Corporation.

In July, 1956, an investment group headed by Serge Semenenko and Charles Allen, Jr., acquired control, 600,000 shares, of the company from Harry M. and Albert Warner. Jack Warner retained his shares, remaining as the largest single stockholder and becoming president of the company.

The new picture company continues in production and its subsidiaries also continue distribution through its domestic and foreign exchanges. In addition to the production, distribution and processing facilities which are retained by the new picture company, it also owns 37½ per cent interest in Associated British Picture Corp., a 400-theatre circuit in the British Isles; a theatre in London and two theatres in Latin America; and it continues to own the Music Publishers Holding Corp., which owns M. Witmark & Sons, Harms, Inc., and Remick Music Corp., all music publishers, and Edward A. Stege Co. engaged in printing music.
